

The mind map is a comprehensive organizational chart of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. At the center is a large red circle labeled "Secretary Health & Human Services". Radiating from this center are numerous smaller circles and diamonds, each representing a different agency, program, or office. The map is color-coded: red for the central hub, blue for major branches, and various other colors (green, yellow, orange, purple) for more specific sub-agencies and programs. Key entities include the President, Vice President, Congress, Treasury, IRS, Social Security Administration, Medicare, Medicaid, CMS, CDC, FDA, NIH, and various regional offices. The map is densely packed with text and color-coded to distinguish between different functional areas.
