

PSY-260 Case Study: Psychology Internship

Meet Frank.

Frank is a university student,

He is currently working as a student intern,

At a mental health agency...

But today, Frank is troubled, as he was asked to go through and file patient charts by his supervisor.

Problem is, when Frank started his internship, he had to sign a confidentiality agreement.

The agreement stated that he must only access client information, only when absolutely necessary

And only with the guidance or supervision from full-time agency staff.

To make matters worse, one of the patient's files he is supposed to sort has the name of his current roommate.

To complicate the situation, Frank's roommate has been acting very strange lately and his file may be able to explain some things...

What should Frank do?

Should Frank notify his supervisor about his current confidentiality agreement policy dilemma?

OR

Should Frank complete the task and maybe take a look to see if his roommate is dangerous...
